MICROSCHOOL

Made Simple

Are you considering starting a small, unconventional school?

Define Your Vision

- Prayerfully clarify your educational goals, values, and the specific needs of your children or group.

Check Legal Requirements

- Illinois private schools require no accreditation, licensing, or specific insurance.

Estimate Cost Structure

- Estimate the financial costs of establishing and maintaining a school, including insurance, tuition, curriculum, and other related expenses from your home.

Design Your Curriculum

- Collect educational materials, including textbooks, workbooks, and online resources that support your curriculum.

Set Up Your Learning Center

- The site should be convenient for students, staff, and families, particularly if the microschool is situated in a public or shared environment.

Plan Your Schedule

- Create a structured yet flexible schedule that accommodates the individual needs of your students.

Engage with the Community

- Connect with other families who are looking for unconventional educational options for their children.

SMALL START. BIG IMPACT. SIMPLE STEPS TO FREEDOM.

MICROSCHOOL

Made Simple

Who can start a Microschool?

Anyone can establish a microschool. Starting a small, unconventional school has never been easier!

With a Microschool, anyone—parents, homeschooling parents, retired teachers, community members, and clergy—can create one with as few as five students.

This stress-free approach provides a creative and distinctive way to support one's community.

Microschools offer a personalized, one-on-one learning environment that enables students to explore their interests, take classes in various subjects, develop as independent learners, cultivate critical thinking skills, and achieve their full potential.

Why start a Microschool?

This educational approach aims to provide an affordable alternative to conventional schools, similar to the "one-room schoolhouse." Microschools can be in-person, online, or hybrid, offering innovative and independent learning environments.

Booker T. Washington established one-room schoolhouses where children learned reading, writing, and arithmetic, along with biblical principles that shaped their character, fostered economic independence, encouraged citizenship, developed vocational skills, supported entrepreneurship, and promoted career development.

This type of learning environment helps children develop into well-rounded individuals, equipping them to become Kingdom citizens who contribute to society for the glory of God.
